The Supremacy of the Civil Over the Military. His Satanic Majesty sometimes quo Scripture; and the Secesh quote the Constitution, and undertake to lecture us on the supremacy of the civil over the military power.

It is strange that a party that has resorted to the military to put down the civil power should grow eloquent now over the consequences, and wish for themselves the protection of the civil power over the military. When men make their choice of committing their rights to the military over the back ! civil power, they ought to adhere to their choice and not shift their position when the military bear hard upon them.

We cannot permit them now to change sides, and profess a zeal for the supremacy of the civil power. We beg leave to remind them that the war on the part of the Government is undertaken to support the authority and sanctity of the civil power. It is because of combination too powerful to be met by the civil power, by its ordinary means, that the Government has called out the military force of the country. It was done reluctantly, after the civil power was by the military force resisted and defied.

And now we pledge onrselves that If they will obey the civil anthorities the Union armies will disband. There will not be another hostile gun fired nor sword drawn. We have raised armies to restore the civil authorities of the country that are powerless before an armed resistance and rebel-

We know it is vital to a free people that the military should be subordinate to the civil power. Let the Secesh now, in good faith, acknowledge the supremacy of the civil power. Let them submit the rights they talk about to the civil power, and this Union men will be vastly obliged to them. We are anxious to dispense with the military. It is costly and, of necessity, despotic. Publish the proposition to all rebeldom to submit to the civil power, and

BATON ROUGE, LA., August 7, 1862. My Dear Captain Clark: Though just from the geld of battle, I cannot say that the smoke or glory can attach itself to my skirts; for, no matter what my fighting propensities may be, it was not my good forthe Camp Meore army or in the destruction turn of the Arkansas. The latter I will dispose the of a loutrance, by asserting that it was a Fourth Louisiana Regiment, we learn that fair stand up, knock down, and scratch gravel fight between the two icon-clad non-descripts—the Union Essex and the rebel Arkansas. No matter what the rebels may say, it was a square fight. The Arkansas took the position of her choice, in a deep bend of the river, where she tied up, but with her starboard and port broadsides sweeping the river up and down, and her bow raking across, at the same time ready to dash across and plunge her bow into any vessel attempting to pass in front of her. Porter of the Essex, with a seaman's instinct, saw this plan of the enemy, and wisely laid below, but not more than three hundred yards distant, whence he plunged till, a favorable broach being made in her shell was exploded in the breach, instantly setting the Arkansas on fire. Her bow, where the shell burst, being the windward end, ln a few minutes the navy who were so fortunate as to be present at this last naval combat of two iron-clads had the satisfaction of seeing the crew of the rebel scuttling on shore, while the flames were bursting out on every side. But be it lines burning off, she floated into the middle of the river, where, in a little while, she blew up. Let no credulous or unbelieving rebel flatter his soul that this was not the Arksnses that was sunk and destroyed. So much for the naval part of the affair-imwithout impediment with the land forces.

The battle of Baton Rouge may be characterized as one of the most soldier-like, skillfully planned fights of this war. Gen. Williams, with his well-known ability as a leader, scorned to rally behind houses and one above and one below-on each side of the town. About a mile and a half a road cuts these two roads at right angles, while extending from road to road is a large cem-etery, facing towards the city and looking directly into the camp of the Indiana, Massachusetts, and Connecticut Regiments. The front of this cemetery is fenced with patiling, while the cemetery is thickly strewn with large tombs and overgrown with high rank weeds. This was the position of the rebel center. Our center was composed of the Indiana Twenty-first, the Massachusetts and Connecticut, drawn up on the opposite side of the roads, and not more than forty-five rods distant. The rebel right approached through corn fields and over a rolling country, attacked with great Impetuosity the Fonrteenth Malne's camp and drove them out, burning and pillaging the campin - few minutes. So sitently di tthe rebels approach and so well were they concealed, that they were in the cemetery and drawn up in battle array with-out our knowing it. With a yell they rushed Massachusetts.

not a man, woman or child live after her. [From the Baton Rouge Daily News, Aug. 7.] Yesterday, the 5th of August, was inleed a day of horror and confusion in Baton Rouge. At about half-past four o'clock the rebel troops, under the command of Major General Breckiuridge and Brigadier Gen-cral Ruggles, attacked the Federal troops here, under the command of Gen. Williams, and for the space of more than two hours hailed a shower of shot and bullets into the tune either to take part in the repulse of Federal ranks. The are was promptly re turned. the force engaged under Gen. Breckinridge would probably reach seven thousand men, of whom but four regiments were brought into action. The Confederate States gunboat Arkansas, which was expected to materially aid In the attack on Baton Ronge, did not arrive according to appointment. The United States gunboats, five in number, anchored above and below the town, materially assisting in holding the rebel force in check. We have not been able at this writing to gather any information with regard to the Federal killed and wounded, but suppose that their loss cannot be more than one hundred total. We passed over the field solld nine-inch shot into the Arkansas, yesterday, after the engagement, and noted some fifteen dead and probably twice that number of wounded Confederate soldiers, who were left upon the field from choice, knowing that they would be among their friends and relatives; they were cared for by the citizens, and are all doing well.

Brigadier General Williams was killed in the engagement. Colonel Allen, of the Fourth Louisians. was severely wounded, also Generals Breck-inridge and Lovell.

To-day (Wednesday) the United States gunboats Essox and Sumpter went up some five miles to attack the Coufederate States gunboat Arkansas. Two reports are current in town-one that she has been blown up by a shell from the United States gunboat Essex, which, lt is said, reached the magazine; and the other, that sho probably damaged herself, so as not to be manageable, and was blown up to prevent her falling into the hands of the United States officials. Since the above was written, we learn that several wounded Confederates were taken to the various hospitals in this city. Rumors of all kinds and descriptions circulated by "men of all creeds, too, the Jew, the Turk, the Christian"-are extremely prevalent. The nerves of the ln-habitants of this city have been so highly affected for the past two or three days that every sound in the distance is translated into some message of slaughter and car-nage. The female portion of the population are alike down on Feds and Confeds. No one knows which way lo turn him, Ait things either melt or burn him.

Living as we do in this day and generation, replete with all the excitement and nervonsness that have been entailed upon us for the past eighteen hundred years, a small part of excitability was dealt out to us on last Tuesday morning. BRECKINEIDGE ON THE DOUBLE QUICK STEP

(From the New Orleans Delta, August 5.) The repulse of General Brecklaridge le one of the most signal victories yet achieved by the Union arms. The rebel chief came with sixteen regiments of infantry, a body of cavalry, and ten pieces of field artillery. Before he set out on the fatal march he as-sured his soldiers that they would breakfast in the capital of the State. The feast they found in readiness was something they lid not anticipate.

The conflict was fierce. From four o'clock n the morning until ten o'clock the fight was furious. Three of their regiments attacked the Twenty-first Indiana, and for a oment produced dismay, but the gsllant williams rode up, crying, "Now, my men, charge again and the day is ours." The braves responded, and recaptured their lost gun; but Williams was dead. It was a costly ictory. Yet the hero whom we mourn ould not count it so.

He attempted to take Baton Rouge, failed, and, it is said, lost an arm. He may not have lost his arm, but certainly he has lost his heart. About this demonstration of the Brigadier there has been a great deal of mystery. We have had numerous stories from the Secession sheets, and reprinted by ns, from Govern-ment sources, to the effect that Breekinridge had captured Baton Rouge, and was advancing on New Orleans. Those who had admired the Senator's political principles began to appland his military talents, and among these men there was general and secret joy. Now, we grieve to say, the atory is altered. Brecklnridge has been beaten badly, and is probably afflicted with a severe wound. It is the inexorable custom of Davis never to pardon a military ndianapolis, Collector, Wm. A. Plumb, senior member of the firm of Plumb & Co., mercantile agency, 240 Broadway, was arrested vesterday vesterday by Provost Marshal Kennedy on a charge of uttering disloyal and treason able sentiments. Mr. Plnmb is a noted abolitionist, and holds the view that the blacks should be used as soldiers. The affidavit sets forth that at the store of W C. Dawley & Co., 42 Cortlandt street, he was heard to say that President Lincoln ought to be hung, and that if he had a friend or friends that wanted to enlist he would adrise them to go to Canada; and further, that if he was liable to the draft and were drafted, he would resist the draft. He would advise men not to enlist until the war was conducted according to his idea, and that idea was that the slaves should be used as soldiers. This is the first abolition-ist arrested in this city, and the proceeding has caused a good deal of excitement. The accused will be held by the provest marshal until intelligence concerning his case arrives from the Judge Advocate at Washingon .- New York World, 19th.
